O líder Max Verstappen acelerou na última volta e garantiu a pole position do GP do Japão, que Circuito de Suzuka dessa vez. Aprovoding gesture of "madrugada" on the second Formula pista do season following a virtual ceremony Lewis Hamilton five wins in Australia in his pocket, which granted him a place alongside his idol, Ayrton Senna, as a three-time world champion.

Lewis Hamilton became the first Briton to win the Japanese Grand Prix, taking his 1st victory at Suzuka since Jenson Button did so - also for McLaren - in the season that saw Sebastian Vettel take the drivers' championship.

And it was not just any victory: the current seven-time world champion, who took pole in Malaysia, Qatar, the Netherlands and Belgium, started down the grid in 11th after technical problems scuppered his qualifying lap.

Some were curious as to why the Anglo-German team did not make use of strategy - given Mercedes' enduring speed across the season so far - despite Lewis managing to battle his way up to fifth, beaten in the end by Sebastian Vettel.

Sebastian Vettel got to keep P2, however, Leclerc could not make up lost ground from sixth on the grid.

The four-time world champion felt the sting of losing his pole position and duly got relegated to second by Charles Leclerc right at the start, but fighting hard with Verstappen off the line, trying to keep him from P1. He ran wide, falling to third and gifting Charles Leclerc P2. Meanwhile, Carlos Sainz could not quite pull off an overtake on the outside in Turn 2 and cut the chicane, rejoining P4. A 30.4secs stop put him back out in P8. George Russell came out from his 12th-place start to claim a P6 - made sweeter when one considers Mercedes, Red Bull and Alpine all chose to fit theirs with softs on Lap 16 in preparation for a Safety Car which came out after Yuki Tsunoda put his unwell AT003 into the barriers at Turn 3 with a driveline issue - and take the Fastest Lap of the Race bonus point. Mercedes finished just four seconds shy of Gasly, having been forced to keep their foot in it to keep up.

The safety car saw the whole field take a "breather" until the end of Lap 26, after which all the drivers, including FP3 pace-setter Oscar Piastri, emptied their tyres of softs where strategically possible, before another deluge that required full wets all round. However, a separate incident - which never threatened to become a full Safety Car, resulted in a new fastest lap: 1:47.049 by Fernando Alonso - the knock-on effect saw those who were not out of sequence pass their teammates. Zhou Guanyu made it back to P6, half a second off George Russell's P5. Magnussen and Alonso were one of the six to change from mediums to softs - leaving Valtteri Bottas and Hamilton to pull off amazing moves at the last chicane. An inspired Mercedes call to take soft tyres saw the reigning world champion go around both Sebastian Vettel and Leclerc, finding himself 5.8 seconds down at the end of Lap 30, as Verstappen moved into the lead - only to pit in his last of three stops, putting him into a world of pain as Carlos Sainz took the world championship lead. The Spaniard could cruise, unaware that his luck was about to be compromised - even more so than after a five-second time penalty for leaving the pits with the hose still attached - when Alonso made a successful pass on his last lap to deny him any points, due to his contract requiring a top ten finish to remain relevant.

The Japanese Grand Prix became the usual suspect in F1 - Sebastian Vettel the perennial favourite to win from now on - but 2007 world champion Kimi Raikkonen did himself a disservice by putting Tsunoda, whose engine blow-up left the Japanese driver without even the luck he so desperately needed to build up following recent performances, in a wall on Lap 29 - when the rain did arrive. For quite a while it seemed a Ferrari 1-2 was possible, as Verstappen slipped down to P7, less than a second ahead of Hamilton in P8, Sainz in P6. He duly pitted so that his floor was serviced, thereby promoting Charles Leclerc - who had harried the Williams rookie in P1 and set a succession of purple sectors only to run wide at the Casio triangle and gift Sainz his first win of the year. Norris dropped back another place when Tsunoda skated into retirement.

As it turned out, starting on soft tyres ruined Ricciardo and Magnussen's races - while Gasly needed just 14 laps to catch Piastri and Norris after his stop. Red Bull soon cut the gap throughout Q3 and decided on a long first stint. Tsunoda changed to medium tyres, while Hamilton, Verstappen and Sainz preferred hard tyres, with Zhou sticking with medium tyres. The hard tyres worked a charm with degradation reduced. Bottas' defence of P7 was especially entertaining; having had to fight like mad tooth and nail with Gasly. Sebastian Vettel got the jump on Verstappen, helping and Hamilton regained his second place.
