Professional era [ edit ]

[3] The 7 Morcego didn't fare well in the 1989 season, finishing dead last after losing nine of ten games and scoring just 7 one point overall, following a goalless draw with Atlético.

The following years, the Morcego were a mainstay in the bottom of 7 the Campeonato Acreano table, more often than not failing to win a single game.

After defeating Grêmio 2–0 on 23 July 7 1995, Andirá had a winless streak that lasted more than two years, ending with a 4–3 victory over Atlético on 7 1 August 1997.

In 1995, Andirá played for the first time in a national competition, taking part in the 1995 Série 7 C. The club finished last among 107 clubs, losing all four games they played.

In the 90's, Andirá were in the losing 7 side of several blowout games, including a 1–11 loss to Independência in 1993, [4] a 0–8 defeat to Juventus on 7 11 June 1995,[5] a 0–7 defeat once again to Independência, on 17 June 1997, [6] and another 0–8 loss, this 7 time to ADESG, on 5 June 1999.[7]

Andirá had a better showing in the 2000 season, finishing second in the second 7 stage of the Campeonato Acreano, but nevertheless failing to advance to the finals.

They played for the second time in the 7 Série C in 2001, finishing sixth out of seven in their group and 37th overall.

The next year, Andirá had another 7 shot at the Série C, but failed to win a single game and finished 55th overall.

After a 4th place finish 7 in the 2001 state league, the Morcego finished last in 2002 and 2003, improving their record to a 5th place 7 finish in 2004.

The club decided not to play in the 2005 Campeonato Acreano, returning in 2006.

The club made it to 7 the first stage semifinals, losing 2–3 to ADESG.

Andirá finished fourth overall in the 2006 Campeonato Acreano.

The 7 Morcego quickly found their way back to the top tier of the state league, claiming the second division title in 7 2011.

Led by league top goalscorer Eduardo, the club finished 6th in the 2012 Campeonato Acreano.

Andirá escaped relegation in 2013, finishing 7 second-last, but a last place finish in 2014 meant the club would have to play in the Segunda Divisão for 7 the second time.

Andirá won their second Segunda Divisão title on 29 September 2015, beating ADESG 4–2 aggregate in the finals.
